Introduction

PRONI has in its custody a wide range of material relating to sport and recreation, ranging from billiards to gliding. Sport in Northern Ireland, which was usually organised on a Province of Ulster basis, took off in the late-19th century and much of the impetus was generated by the presence of the armed services. Cricket, football, hockey and rugby in particular benefited from this presence. Northern Ireland's sporting history is an important part of its cultural heritage and is well documented in PRONI. Minute books for a number of major sports clubs and organisations are available for research. Of particular interest are the records of the Irish Football Association comprising of 53 volumes of minute books, 1880-1985, relating to the principal committees of the I.F.A., including the Council, International, Finance, Protests and Appeals, and Junior committees. These records span the history of organised football in Ireland and include details on the split with the League of Ireland and the expulsion of Belfast Celtic. Other highlights include the Ulster Branch of the Irish Rugby Football Union, 1886-1983, Linfield Football and Athletic Club, 1934-1972, Northern Cricket Union of Ireland papers, 1914-1998, the Ulster Women's Hockey Union, 1905-1993, and the Ulster Council of the Lawn Tennis Association, 1927-1970. PRONI also possesses the records of the Northern Ireland Sports Council that can be easily accessed because unlike most other government records, the Sports Council has a 10-year closure date instead of the usual 30-year.
